Overview

Veslemøy Lode has experience in collective and individual employment law, and EU law, with a particular focus on employee status of digital platform workers, on-call temporary workers and freelancers. She wrote her master's thesis on the EU's directive on transparent and predictable working conditions and the significance it has for Norwegian law.

Veslemøy's professional background includes 15 years' experience as a political journalist from several of Norway's largest political departments in newspapers such as Dagbladet and VG. This has generated a wide network of contacts in both politics and organizational life, and she can therefore also assist clients with media and communication advice.
